It is false that you can get into a CPA network house without having any kind of site at all. It is possible to get into them with no site, but usually these people are well known for other reasons. This is exactly why you should create a good looking website or blog that is related to the niche that you're aiming to target. What you are looking at doing is buying a hosting package, and they are cheap, and getting a domain name - dot coms are best. The first thing the affiliate manager will go check out is your website, and if they feel that it's not good enough then you'll straight away be rejected. It's really not that difficult to have a professional site these days; you can either buy a template or have it designed by a good web designer if you can't do it yourself. This one investment can prove to be worthwhile in the long run. Make sure the topic you're choosing for your website is not too narrow; be broad and make a good impression. Keep Trying Until You Succeed: Affiliate marketing takes a certain amount of effort and determination, and this starts off with the process of applying to networks. Some networks will probably reject your applications. But guess what? There's no point in complaining about this, as it's just the way things are. Just focus on your goals, and don't let setbacks stop you. Prepare yourself for not being accepted by every network and it won't bother you as much. One thing you should do is try your best to find out exactly why a particular network rejected you; that way, you can alter your approach in the future. Your goal should be to get into as many networks as possible, as this will give you a chance to profit from a greater number of offers. So keep pushing and grow your reach as you move ahead.
